Jeffrey Epstein calendar reveals meetings with prominent figures

Fox News contributor Bill McGurn argues the prominent figures named in Epstein's private calendar were likely trying to 'extract' money.

A trove of documents that were in the possession of disgraced financier and convicted pedophile Jeffrey Epstein reportedly show he interacted with people who included a former Israeli prime minister, a former treasury secretary, other high-powered financiers and Woody Allen.

The documents revealed Epstein's scheduled meetings with former Treasury Secretary and Harvard President Emeritus Lawrence Summers, billionaire LinkedIn founder Reid Hoffman, former Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak, Apollo Global Management co-founder Leon Black and others, according to The Wall Street Journal.

The thousands of pages detailing Epstein's emails and schedules were reportedly from 2013 to 2017, which encompasses a period after Epstein was jailed in 2008 after pleading guilty to charges of solicitation, including soliciting a minor.

The Journal noted it was unable to prove if all the scheduled meetings with powerful figures occurred or what their purpose was, but that the majority of people reporters spoke to said they met with Epstein for donations or to make powerful connections.

Summers, who served as treasury secretary under former President Bill Clinton from 1999 to 2001, reportedly sought out Epstein's "small-scale philanthropy advice" in April 2014 for his attempt to raise $1 million for an online poetry project his wife Elisa New, a Harvard American literature professor, was working on.

The two subsequently met for dinner in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and they continued to meet even after Harvard University stopped accepting Epstein's donations, according to the Journal. Tax records reported by the outlet indicate an Epstein-linked nonprofit donated $110,000 to New's poetry nonprofit in 2016.

A spokesperson for the couple told the Journal that Summers "deeply regrets being in contact with Epstein after his conviction," and that his wife's nonprofit "regrets accepting funding from Epstein" and that it made a donation "exceeding the amount received, to a group working against sex trafficking." Neither Summers nor New immediately responded to Fox News Digital's request for comment.

Billionaire internet entrepreneur and LinkedIn co-founder Hoffman once visited Epstein's Caribbean island Little St. James and planned to stay at his New York City townhouse in 2014, according to the outlet. Hoffman reportedly attempted to raise money for the Massachusetts Institute of Technology with Joi Ito, who was serving at the time as media lab director at the school.

"Reid attended a few fundraising events at my request, including one trip to Little St. James, after I confirmed to Reid that Mr. Epstein had been an approved donor target for MIT in accordance with university rules and regulations," Ito told the Journal.

After Epstein's arrest in 2019, Ito apologized for accepting any of Epstein's money and resigned from his position at MIT Media Lab. The school subsequently donated $850,000 to nonprofits that aid sexual abuse survivors.

Hoffman apologized for the meeting in an email to the Journal.

"It gnaws at me that, by lending my association, I helped his reputation and thus delayed justice for his survivors," he wrote. "While I relied on MIT's endorsement, ultimately I made the mistake, and I am sorry for my personal misjudgment." Fox News Digital has reached out to Hoffman for further comment.

Actor and director Allen was scheduled to meet with Epstein nearly every month in 2014 and 2015, according to the outlet, and the financier invited him regularly to dinner parties at his home in New York City, where they were neighbors. A spokesperson for Allen maintained to the outlet that the filmmaker never had a business meeting with Epstein and that the dinner parties always included other guests.

The documents also reportedly showed former Israeli Prime Minister Barak's dozens of flights on Epstein's private jet and visits to his mansions.
